

What you should know when writing bridal shower invitations

Part of the fun of giving a bridal shower to your friend is the honor of inviting some of her closest friends and female relatives. After you are done with all the details and have prepared everything like a good general, now comes the part where you invite people. Now, why leave the invitation for last, you might ask? Well, first in terms of practicality, in case you suddenly have to move the date to another day, you would not want to go to the hassle of calling everyone and then resend another invitation. Now, when it comes to the success of the party, well, you would want everything to be perfect right? So it means the invitation too. So it would be better to have the invitation last so that you can be sure that they will match your party. Supposing you suddenly changed your mind and decided to give a theme bridal shower invitation. Of course you want your invitation to have the same theme and to inform your guests properly. In any case, any changes you decide later on can still be done if you still have not given out the invitation.

The first thing that you should do before you write on the invitation is to make a list of the people who will be invited. You do this by asking the bride for the list, so you can make sure you have not left someone out. Once you have the list, go over it with the bride to make sure that everyone on the list is invited in the wedding. It would be embarrassing for the bride if you invite someone for the bridal party when that someone is not invited in the wedding.

Next after the list is the right wording for your invitation. The first things that your invitation should have are the brides full name, the date of the party, the time, the location and the RSVP details. Then if it is a theme party, you might wish to include also the specific theme and the gifts. And do not forget your name as the host of the bridal shower. If you are giving a surprise party, make sure you give explicit instructions and details to the guests so that they will be able to arrive earlier than the bride. Last but certainly the most important, your guests should have time to buy gifts, to prepare and to arrange their schedules so your invitation must be received by all the guests ahead of time.
